

A COUNTRY DIVIDED:

EFFECTS OF THE AMERICAN CIVIL WAR ON THE MAILS

EXHIBIT FOCUS AND STRUCTURE: This exhibit tells the story of the American Civil War and its effects on the mails. It is arranged by the sections listed in the table shown at right. A colored block in blue ■ and/or gray ■ at the upper left of the first page in each chapter serves to identify Union and/or Confederate representation:

- The bold sub-header on each page at upper left indicates the postal system involved, year, and geographic location or direction traveled of the items displayed.
- The bold sub-header at upper right identifies the category of mail or type of item.
- Boldface, italicized statements describe important items, including the degree of rarity, supported by census data if available or based on the exhibitor's experience. Especially rare items are highlighted in a red box.

EFFECTS ON POSTAL SYSTEM: In 1860 the mails were the essential means of communication, augmented by the telegraph system, and were so important that the Postmaster General was a presidential cabinet member. With the secession of Southern states and formation of the new Confederate government, the postal system that once served an entire continent was divided into two separate entities:

- The Civil War's effects on the mails were felt on both sides of the conflict, but they were more severe in the South.
- Correspondence between the North and South was banned along with trade. The CSA postal system was inaugurated on 1 June 1861. Approximately 1,200 Southern postmasters who had previously sworn oaths to the US government resigned. Many were reappointed as CSA postmasters, while others were replaced. Railroads, stagecoaches and vessels that once carried the US mails now did so for the CSA.
- Southerners accustomed since 1851 to paying 3¢ for a letter—usually with an engraved, perforated stamp—now paid 5¢ or 10¢ a letter.
- The CSA's failure to provide stamps for months forced post offices to revert to handstamps and other provisional means of paying postage, and the stamps eventually furnished were crudely printed and lacked perforations. Shortages of paper and other materials forced Southerners to find creative ways to improvise, such as making envelopes from wallpaper and other materials, or reusing previously-mailed envelopes.
- The Federal coastal blockade and eventual conquest of the Mississippi River forced Southern correspondents to use blockade runners and special couriers to carry letters. The mails followed the soldiers, and prisoners of war sent and received letters that were exchanged under flags of truce at designated locations.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND: The secession of states that started with South Carolina in 1860 was viewed by the Lincoln administration as a lawless act of insurrection, and the United States never recognized the legitimacy of the Confederate States. The war spanned four years, commencing with the bombardment of Fort Sumter in April 1861 and concluding with the capture of Confederate president Jefferson Davis and the surrender of the major CSA armies in the spring of 1865. Approximately 625,000 soldiers on both sides, 2% of the entire population, died for their causes. The war was indirectly responsible for the assassination of one president, Abraham Lincoln, and the election of another, Ulysses S. Grant. The social, economic and political effects of slavery and emancipation reverberate to this day, almost 160 years later.

Every item has at least one certificate from The Philatelic Foundation or Confederate Stamp Alliance.

THE POLITICS OF 1860

The Antebellum Period in American history, generally spanning the period from the end of the War of 1812 to the commencement of the Civil War in 1861, was characterized by the rise of abolition and the gradual polarization of the country between abolitionists and supporters of slavery. Growing belief in Manifest Destiny - the idea that America was destined to expand its civilization, culture and superior morality from coast to coast - increasingly divided the Northern and Southern states over the rights of slave owners and the issue of extending slavery to the new western states. In this context, the presidential election of 1860 served as the catalyst for the outbreak of the Civil War by splintering the Democratic Party into Northern and Southern factions and fostering the creation of a new Constitutional Union Party. The unified Republican Party, dominant in the North, won the election for Abraham Lincoln with only 40% of the popular vote and almost no support from the South. Voter turnout was 81.2%, the highest in American history to date.

1860 Campaign Envelopes

Campaign envelopes were used to promote each party's candidates. The production and use of pro-Lincoln envelopes was limited to the North.

Former Whigs and Know Nothings founded the Constitutional Union Party to preserve the Union by taking a neutral stance on slavery, nominating John Bell and Edward Everett.

Bell campaign cover over-printed "TRAITOR." in red, reflecting the mixed sentiments in both the North and South of his slavery-neutral position; US 3c 1857, 29 June 1861.

Vice President John C. Breckinridge of Kentucky and Joseph Lane were nominated by the Southern, pro-slavery, Democratic Party. The Northern Democratic candidate was Stephen A. Douglas.

UNION AND SECESSION

Following the election of 1860, the national focus shifted to whether the South would accept the outcome. Almost immediately, secessionists gained momentum and pushed states toward disunion and on 20 December, only a month and half after the election, South Carolina passed its Ordinance of Secession and formally left the Union. Five other southern states followed and on 4 February 1861 they formed the Confederate States at the convention held in Montgomery AL. This insurrection, as Lincoln's administration described it, led to the Confederate bombardment of Union-held Fort Sumter in Charleston harbor on 12 April 1861. Public sentiment for and against Union and Secession exploded in the aftermath of the surrender of Fort Sumter, and by summer the guns of war were heard around the world.

South Carolina was the first state to secede from the Union. The top cover was mailed on 20 December 1860, the date of secession, and the bottom cover was mailed approximately three weeks after secession and two weeks before the formation of the provisional Confederate government at Montgomery, demonstrating that many things—including operation of the Post Office—initially remained unchanged despite the winds of war.

Montgomery Convention and the Siege of Fort Sumter

On 4 February 1861, six seceded states - South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, and Louisiana - met in Montgomery AL to select leaders and establish a provisional Confederate government. The convention sat in Montgomery until 20 May 1861, when it adjourned to Richmond VA, where it completed a permanent constitution and held its first and only presidential election in November 1861. The Union government rejected the claims of secession and considered the Confederacy illegally founded. The War began with the Confederate attack on Fort Sumter on 12 April 1861.

US 3¢ 1857, Charleston SC to Lafayette LA, mailed on 4 February 1861, the date the provisional Confederate government was formed in Montgomery AL by the six seceded states and sent from the state that seceded first.

29 March 1861 from Lieutenant General Winfield Scott in New York City to "Major Robert Anderson, Commanding Fort Sumter, Charleston Harbor, South Carolina," approximately two weeks before the siege of Fort Sumter; the US 1¢ 1857 stamps and address were placed over the flaps to prevent opening without detection.

The letter from General Scott that this envelope carried to Major Anderson is now in the Library of Congress. General Scott reprimanded Major Anderson for making comments about conditions at Fort Sumter: "I have heard of your declaration to Col. Lamson, indicating a desperate purpose. I forbid it as your commander, it being against your duty both as a soldier & Christian."

On 11 April 1861, General Beauregard sent representatives demanding the surrender of the fort, and on 12 April the Confederate shelling of the fort began, continuing for 34 hours before Major Anderson agreed to evacuate.

Early Pro-Union Envelopes

By the early months of 1861 the first envelopes printed with patriotic flags and slogans began to appear. Following the surrender of Fort Sumter and Lincoln's call for troops, Northern use of patriotic stationery exploded. At the same time, Southerners in the newly-formed CSA and sympathizers in states still part of the Union began using envelopes with their own pro-Confederate designs. This section displays examples from this early period of the war.

34-star red and blue flag with "Freedom's Soil" patriotic poem—used with US 3¢ 1857 in May 1861 and typical of the earliest designs.

This multicolor design depicting an Eagle, Shield and Flag in support of "Nationality and Protection" originated in Reading, PA, 6 July 1861, and was sent to Ireland. Text on back reads: 'The destruction of the Snake of South Carolina, Nullification and Secession, and all her progeny by the National Bird. To portray the ultimate overthrow of the evil power, which strikes at the life of the National Government, is the object of this cut.'

Elephant with US flag stepping on the "hungry rat" of secession—published by Murphy & Sons in NYC; used with US 1¢ 1857 stamps, 29 August 1861.

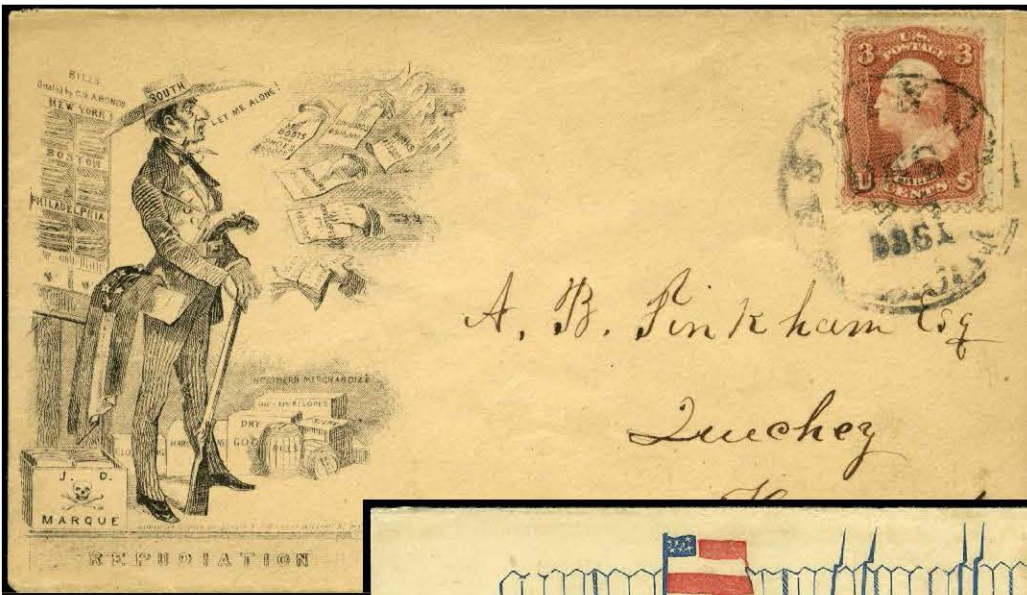

Although the origin of the Republican elephant is attributed to a Thomas Nast cartoon published in 1874, this extremely rare Civil War patriotic shows a US elephant crushing the "hungry rat" of secession.

On 9 February 1861, Jefferson Davis and Alexander H. Stephens were elected Provisional President and Vice President, respectively, of the CSA. The South's agrarian economy relied on slave labor, the exportation of cotton and the importation of manufactured goods. The North's coastal blockade and eventual control over inland waterways strangled the South's import-export economy, and the gradual degradation of the South's railroad system from military attacks and disrepair severely impeded commerce and trade within the CSA. These circumstances led to food and material shortages, hoarding and speculation, the government's inability to generate revenue, hyper-inflation and the loss of credit in the financial markets. Conversely, the Union had an adequate food supply, an extensive rail network that enabled the rapid movement of men, weapons and goods, and a vastly superior manufacturing base that enabled it to supply its soldiers with adequate weapons and ammunition. This section displays covers that reflect Southern commercial activity and use of the Northern postal system at the beginning of the War, prior to suspension of postal service to the seceded Southern states.

Transatlantic Mail from CSA to Europe

Even after Lincoln proclaimed a blockade of coastal ports in the seceded states in April 1861, mail from the South addressed to foreign countries continued to be carried through the US postal system to northern ports from which regular transatlantic sailings departed. Regular mails stopped in June 1861.

Sent from New Orleans on 14 March 1861 after Louisiana joined CSA—carried on the Cunarder Niagara, departing Boston 20 March, arriving in Queenstown 2 April.

DISRUPTION OF MAILS

The surrender of Fort Sumter led to Lincoln's call for troops on 15 April 1861 and a naval blockade of Southern ports. Mail routes to and from Washington DC were disrupted by riots in Baltimore in April, and the US Post Office Department closed the Washington-Richmond route in late May. After the Louisville-Nashville route was closed in early June, mail between the North and South was carried by private express companies until they were banned from carrying mail in August 1861. Flag-of-truce mail exchanges and covert routes were used thereafter.

Southbound Route

Greenish blue "FREE./For the Regiment/ADAMS EXPRESS CO./Per HOEY" four-line handstamp to member of New York State Militia 7th regiment, on 3¢ red star die entire. This example is unusual because it is one of the few showing the use of a 3¢ stamped envelope, a requirement according to the published notices and postal laws, but apparently often ignored.

After Virginia's vote to secede on 17 April, the North's capital in Washington DC was exposed to CSA invasion from the South. US troops sent to defend the capital were attacked on 18-19 April by pro-secession mobs in Baltimore. No post office mail was carried to or from Washington from 20 April until the evening of 25 April. When the lines were restored and the capital was secured on 25 April, Adams Express started carrying mail and packages free of charge for the 7th Regiment NYSM and others defending the capital, with John Hoey as the company's agent in New York City and Col. Locke W. Winchester, quartermaster-general for the 7th Regiment NYSM, as supervisor in Washington DC.

Private Expresses Before 15 June 1861

As early as February 1861, the express companies started carrying more letter mail, apparently at the request of patrons who were concerned about the security of government mails (delays, tampering, intelligence gathering, etc.). Express service prior to 15 June 1861 is classified as Precursor Express Mail, as it precedes the advertised across-the-lines service after closure of the Louisville-Nashville mail route. Covers traveled both North and Southbound.

Southbound: New York to Athens TN, 30 April 1861 via Chattanooga TN with matching "PAID" in oval handstamp.

"Adams. Express Co./ Chattanooga/May 5" oval handstamp applied upon arrival the day before the secession referendum.

Northbound: New Orleans LA to Blooming Grove NY, 16 May 1861, entering US mails at New York City on May 23 for final leg to destination.

Manuscript "2/" (two bits, or 25c) express company charge at top left. The 3¢ entire was apparently accepted as full postage from New Orleans to New York and then to Blooming Grove.

Both 3¢ stamped envelopes carried by Adams Express across-the-lines, the top cover Southbound and the bottom cover Northbound. Adams had been carrying mail for months prior to the official commencement of the Confederate postal operations on 1 June 1861 and the May 27 suspension of Union mails in the seceded Southern states. However, there is no documentation or advertisements of the express mail during the precursor period from January to May 1861.

Demonetization of US Stamps

The termination of US mails in the South and the start of the CSA's own postal system left both sides with the need to replace postage stamps used before the war. The US acted quickly by printing and distributing the new 1861 series and demonetizing all of the previous issues. Post offices in several cities used hand-stamped markings to indicate "Old Stamps Not Recognized." In the CSA the attempted use of old US stamps was also disallowed.

US and CSA Dead Letter Offices

On 27 May 1861, the Union Post Office Department ordered the suspension of all mail service in the seceded states, effective May 31, and southbound letters to suspended southern post offices were to be forwarded to the US Dead Letter Office (DLO) in Washington DC. At the DLO, the diverted mail was opened to ascertain the sender's address, which was written on the face. The diverted letters were then postmarked before being returned to the sender and marked for return postage due.

Until 23 May 1861, mail between the United States to eastern CSA states was normally carried on the Washington DC/Richmond route. The Federal occupation of Alexandria VA closed this route on May 24, and from this time until June 1, northbound letters - including both intra-CSA and attempted across-the-lines mail - were diverted to the CSA DLO in Richmond. Upon the June 1 commencement of the CSA postal system, Richmond began to forward mail from the eastern CSA to the US via the Nashville-Louisville across-the-lines route instead of diverting it to the CSA DLO. The very short period during which mail was diverted to the CSA DLO makes these covers rare.

“Southern Letter Unpaid” Mail

Approximately four months after the formation of the CSA, on 27 May 1861, the US Post Office Department suspended postal service in the seceded Southern states. However, the government mails from seceded states continued to be carried north via Nashville and Louisville after the commencement of the CSA postal system on 1 June 1861. Since US postage applied by CSA postmasters was considered contraband, the Louisville postmaster (Dr. John J. Speed) was instructed to “remove” the stamps and mark the letters unpaid. As a practical solution to invalidate postage on the approximate 5,000 accumulated letters, Dr. Speed employed the “SOUTH. LETTER UNPAID” handstamp, usually in combination with the “DUE 3” handstamp and a Louisville datestamp. The Special Routes book records 29 known covers.

Unlike the domestic cover below, no “DUE” marking was applied because the US-France treaty permitted unpaid letters to travel through the US mails with no postage due until arrival in France.

Diverted to US Dead Letter Office

Adams Express Company began advertising its across-the-line service on 22 June 1861, but they had been carrying mail for months prior to that announcement. After the US Post Office Department declared the termination of government mail service in seceded states, US postage on letters from the South was considered invalid contraband. Adams Express appears to have overcome the problem by applying (or re-applying) US stamps at Louisville. However, the procedure was not fully implemented in mid-June, as the cover shown here demonstrates.

Nashville 15 June 1861 blue datestamp with “PAID” and “S” CSA rate on US 3¢ Star Die envelope addressed to Warner NH; black “ADAMS EXPRESS CO./NASHVILLE/JUN 15” oval datestamp and manuscript “Paid 2/-” (two bits, or 25¢) express charge; the Star Die envelope was considered invalid, diverted to US Dead Letter Office and released 16 July with oval datestamp and “DUE 3 cts” marking for US postage.

One of the two letters enclosed in this cover states: “So much information is sent to our enemies by private letters to friends, falling into the hands of treacherous agents & postmasters, that our government has resolved to stop mails between here.”

ACROSS THE LINES

After the government mail routes were closed in early June 1861, the transportation of mails across the lines between the CSA and the US was facilitated exclusively by private express companies. Louisville and Nashville served as the primary conduit for express mail, and the largest operator by far was the Adams Express Company, followed by the American Letter Express Company and Whiteside's Express. A ban on all commercial exchange, including express mail, was proclaimed by President Lincoln, effective 26 August 1861.

American Letter Express Company

The American Letter Express Company was chartered in April 1861 by two former letter carriers, William McGill and Thomas Jenkins, in anticipation of the termination of government mail service between the North and South. The company was given responsibility to carry the residual government mails from Nashville to Louisville after 12 June 1861, and their first advertisement of express service (southbound) appeared on 15 June in the Louisville Daily Journal. The earliest advertisement of northbound service by American appeared in the 29 June Nashville Union and American. For a southbound letter American charged 10¢ for its services plus 5¢ or 10¢ CSA postage, depending on distance. For a northbound letter, the charge was 15¢, which included 3¢ US postage (the sender was responsible for paying 5¢ or 10¢ CSA postage to the Nashville office).

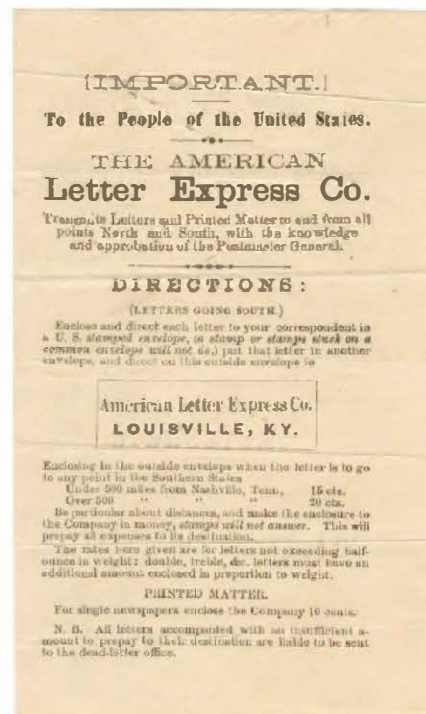

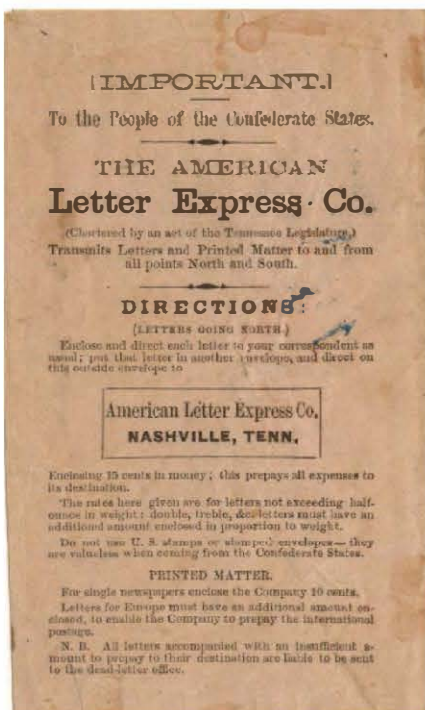

US 3¢ Star Die envelope mailed to American Letter Express in Louisville inside another US 3¢ envelope; datestamped 7 July 1861 and carried across the lines to Nashville where it entered the post office as a drop letter; the blue “Paid” hand-stamp is a Nashville CSA postal marking.

Whitesides Express

M.D. Whiteside (no “s”) and his uncle, Berry Whitesides, operated a contraband letter express during the Spring and Summer of 1861. According to Brooks's American Letter Express Company: "Whiteside had his messenger use the Upper Turnpike out of Louisville to Franklin, Ky., where he lived. He travelled from Louisville to Bardstown, Ky., to New Haven, Buffalo, Glasgow, Scottsville, and Franklin, Ky., and thence to Gallatin, and Nashville, Tenn. His main stop was Franklin, since it was only four miles from the State Line. He used a Confederate friend and sympathizer to carry the mail across the border to Tennessee. The messenger received 10 percent for his services... This smuggling commonly was known as the 'Grapevine.'" Whiteside later expanded his operation to smuggle slaves, arms, ammunition, lead, copper and other items relevant to war efforts.

Originated in New Orleans LA with “New Orleans La./10 Jun” (1861) circular dates-tamp, blue crayon “10” for Confederate postage to Nashville, and then carried from there by Whitesides to Louisville KY where 3¢ dull red 1857 was cancelled and the blue straightline “DUE” and manuscript 3 were added to indicate rejection of the US

One of two recorded covers carried across the lines by Whitesides Express from Nashville to Kentucky. No Southbound covers are known from Whitesides

The label reads: "PRIVATE LETTER MAIL. / Direct each letter to your correspondent as usual, envelope that with 15 cents in money and direct to/ B. WHITESIDES,/ Franklin, Ky./ Letters exceeding half an ounce or going over 500 miles must have additional amount enclosed. For single Newspapers enclose 10 cents."

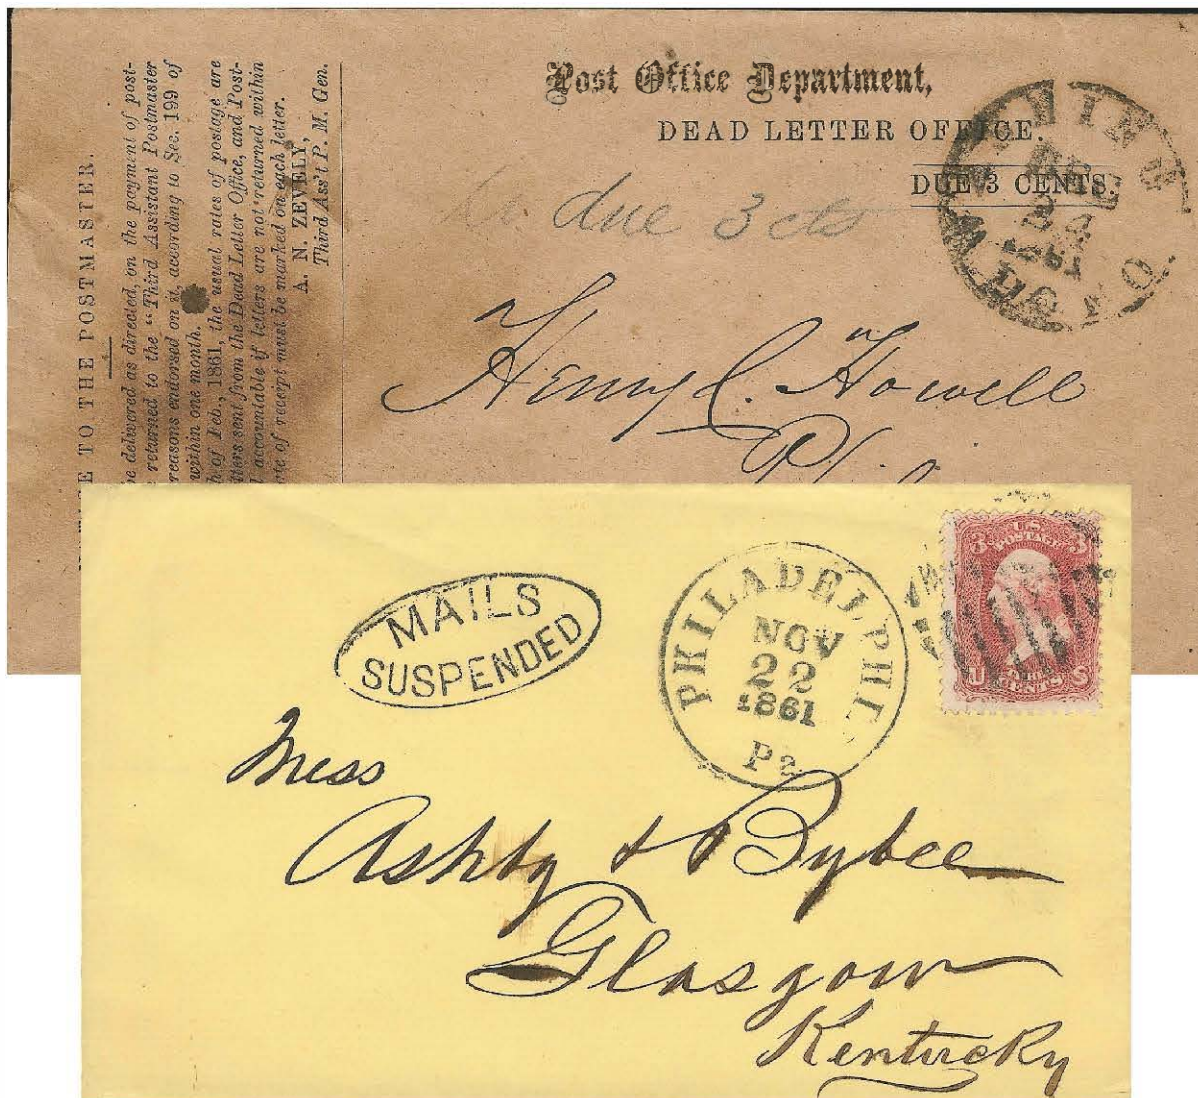

An advertisement for express mail service to the seceded states was first published by M. D. Whiteside on 22 June 1861, in the Louisville Daily Journal. The advertisements specify lower rates than those printed on this label (10c vs. 15c for letters, 5c vs. 10c for newspapers). The rates on the label are identical to the American Letter Express rates advertised on June 15, which indicates that Whitesides may have lowered its rates to more effectively compete with American Letter Express and Adams Express.

US 1861—Attempted North to South

Termination of Mail Across the Lines

President Lincoln proclaimed on 16 August 1861 that all commercial intercourse between the residents of loyal states and “insurgents” in the South shall be unlawful. Postmaster General Montgomery Blair subsequently announced on 26 August that the ban applied to mail correspondence. The express companies immediately stopped accepting southbound mail, and the last northbound mail carried by American Letter Express from Nashville on 28 August was seized by a US marshal upon its arrival in Louisville on 30 August. For the duration of the war, across-the-lines mail was facilitated only through flag-of-truce exchanges, blockade runners, covert routes and unsanctioned means.

Philadelphia 22 November 1861 with US 3¢ 1861 to Glasgow KY after suspension of US mail service; hand-stamped “MAILS SUSPENDED” and sent to US Dead Letter Office in Washington DC; released 24 December 1861 and mailed inside DLO envelope, 3¢ postage due from sender in manuscript.

Glasgow lies about 33 miles east of Bowling Green, which became the state’s Confederate seat of government after Kentucky’s declared neutrality was broken in September 1861; this cover was mailed before the state was admitted to the CSA on 10 December 1861, but US mail routes in the region had already been terminated.

CSA PROVISIONAL POSTAGE

The CSA was not prepared to provide postage stamps when it began mail service on 1 June 1861. The first CSA General Issue was not ready until October 1861, and, throughout the war, shortages and disruptions along distribution routes hampered the CSA's ability to keep post offices supplied with stamps. To meet the need to prepay or collect postage, postmasters used provisional means of marking letters, including handstamped and written rate markings, locally-produced adhesive stamps and printed envelopes, and markings applied to envelopes in advance of use.

Re-Rated Provisional Markings

The difference between a “provisional” handstamped cover—meaning one that was sold in advance of mailing—and a handstamped marking applied at the point of mailing can be difficult to discern. Each of the covers below was rerated, indicating that the first marking was applied in advance of mailing.

Woodcut Adhesives—Athens

During the antebellum period, Southerners grew accustomed to using high-quality engraved stamps with perforations. The Civil War immediately changed all of that. If adhesive stamps were available, they were crudely printed and lacked perforations. Postmasters employed a variety of printing methods to create adhesive stamps, including woodcuts, stereotypes (and possibly electrotypes), typeset forms, handstamped markings, and, in a few places, lithography.

Electrotype/Stereotype Adhesives—Lynchburg/Memphis

Electrotyping and stereotyping are different processes used to achieve the same effect: a printing plate comprising subjects exactly matching the original master engraving or typeset form. Electrotyping, invented during the first half of the 19th century, uses electricity and a chemical solution to create a plate from the master die. Stereotyping uses a mold from which the subjects or plate are cast. The chemical process of electrotyping produces a more accurate facsimile of the original. It seems likely that most printers in the South used the stereotype process, not electrotyping, based on the stamps' appearances.

The 2¢ Red stamps were printed without the marginal inscription “Usable exclusively in the New Orleans Post Office,” which appears on the 5¢ and subsequent 2¢ Blue printings. The accepted theory is that the 2¢ Red stamps were printed first, before Riddell added the imprint, and were withheld from use until January 1862 when the supply of 2¢ Blue stamps was exhausted.

Lithographed Adhesives—Charleston

Lithography—from the Greek words for “stone” and “to write”—is a printing method originally based on the principle that oil and water do not mix. Printing stamps from a lithographic stone—usually a well-polished slab of limestone—starts with design subjects transferred from a matrix and intermediate transfer groups. The designs on the printing stone’s surface accept ink, while the other areas reject ink. When paper is pressed against the stone’s surface, a printed design results. Later forms of lithography employed different elements, but the fundamentals remain the same. Lithography, used by only a few CSA postmasters to create provisional stamps, was used to print the first CSA General Issues.

The Charleston adhesive was lithographed in blue on white wove paper by Evans & Cogswell Company of Charleston. The central design is similar to that of the 5¢ typographed entires, presented elsewhere in this exhibit.

The provisional stamp was placed on sale 4 September 1861 and withdrawn 6 December upon arrival of the first official stamps from the CSA post office. The provisional stamp was temporarily placed on sale again in mid-June 1862 due to a shortage of regular stamps.

Based on stamps examined and taking into consideration the spacing between adjacent stamps, Richard L. Calhoun’s theory is that the 5¢ lithographic stone comprised 90 positions made from six repetitions of the 15-subject transfer group.

Lithographed Adhesives—Mobile

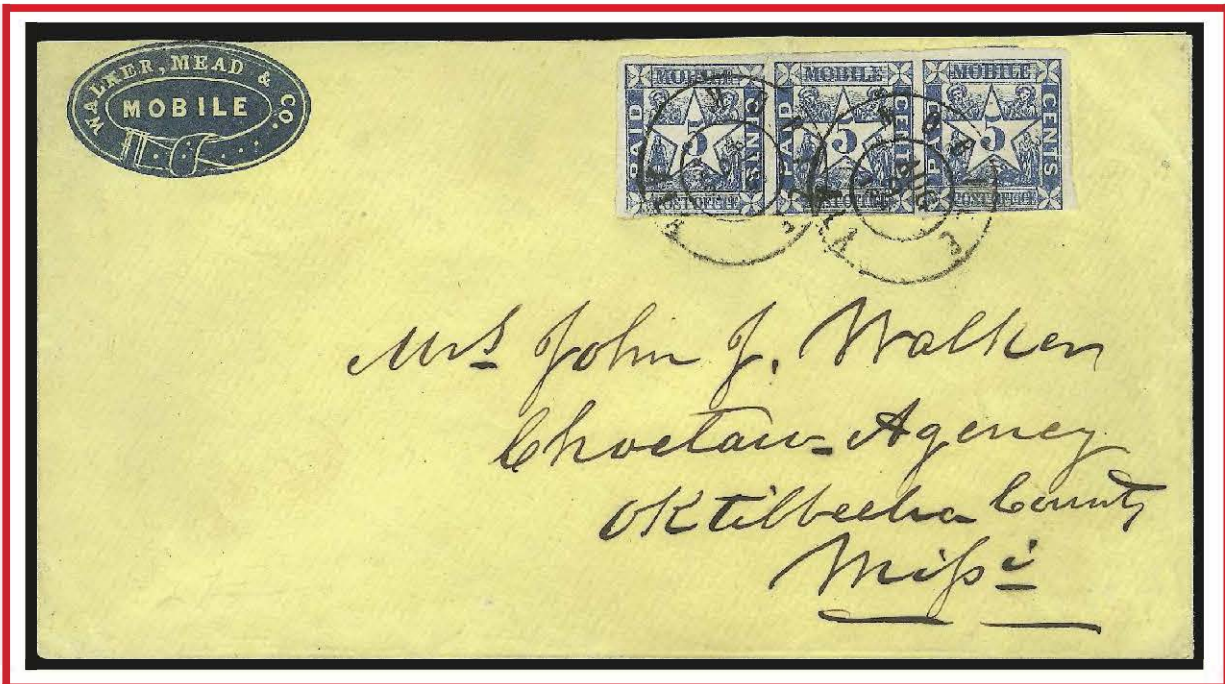

The Mobile AL 2¢ and 5¢ postmaster's provisionals (Lloyd Bowers, PM) are among the few pictorial stamps issued in the CSA. Typeset Adhesives—Baton Rouge/Uniontown

The close association between postmasters and local newspapers and job printers naturally led to a number of provisional issues that were printed on small printing presses, using loose type arranged in small forms. The use of rules and ornamental font pieces for borders is typical of typeset provisional stamps.

The Baton Rouge stamps were printed by George A. Pike, publisher of the local newspaper Comet and Gazette, from a typeset form of ten subjects, arranged in two horizontal rows of five. The setting was changed for each denomination, and two kinds of borders were used. Along with the Greenville AL and Lenoir NC provisionals, the 5¢ is one of three CSA stamps printed in two colors. They are the first government-issued, bi-colored adhesive stamps to appear anywhere in the Western Hemisphere.

Other Innovations—Emory VA, Greenwood Depot VA

In addition to the adhesives presented on prior pages, Confederate postmasters in a very small number of towns prepared adhesive stamps using unique approaches outside of traditional printing methods. The postmaster in Emory VA prepared adhesive stamps by applying handstamp markings to the selvage of the US 1¢ 1857 stamp and the postmaster in Greenwood Depot VA prepared a provisional stamp that was made from laid letter paper to which he applied his manuscript “Ten Cents.”

The Emory 5¢ provisional stamp was produced by the local postmaster by applying handstamp “PAID” and numeral “5” in circle markings to the selvage of the US 1¢ 1857 stamp. The “5” is below the “PAID” in the Type I Emory and reversed in the Type II. The only similar occurrence in U.S. stamp production was the Philadelphia Carrier stamps, which used the selvage of the U.S. 1851 1¢ issue.

Color Changes

In a round of bad decision-making, the CSA Post Office Department first chose to print the 2¢ Jackson stamp in green, the same color used for the 5¢ Lithograph, an invitation to confusion. They then chose to print the 5¢ stamps in blue, the prevailing color of the 10¢. This necessitated changing the 10¢ to another color, and their choice of rose color proved problematic. The inferior impressions and extreme color variability of the 10¢ Rose prove that this color was poorly suited for lithography.

2¢ Rate for Drop Letters

The 2¢ rate for drop letters applied to letters left at the post office that were not transmitted to another post office. The covers below are addressed to the place where they were postmarked, but show different postage amounts paid by stamps. The upper cover was carried across the lines by flag of truce and posted at Richmond as a drop letter for pick-up at the post office. The lower cover was postmarked at Savannah, the destination, but it was prepaid at the unknown origin point for the full regular 10¢ rate.

2¢ Jackson Engraved on inner envelope carried from US to CSA by flag of truce, addressed in care of General Winder in Richmond, posted there as a drop letter 30 May (ca. 1864).

Addressed to Savannah and also postmarked at Savannah 25 May (ca 1864), which would require a 2¢ drop-letter rate; however, the stamps pay 10¢ regular postage (1¢ overpayment), which indicates it originated from a place other than Savannah.

CSA covers are sometimes described as “overpaid drop rate” uses, but they are probably correctly prepaid and were privately carried to the destination city or a place close to it; the combination of 2¢ Jackson Engraved and 5¢ Davis De La Rue Typograph issues is very unusual.

Army of Northern Virginia

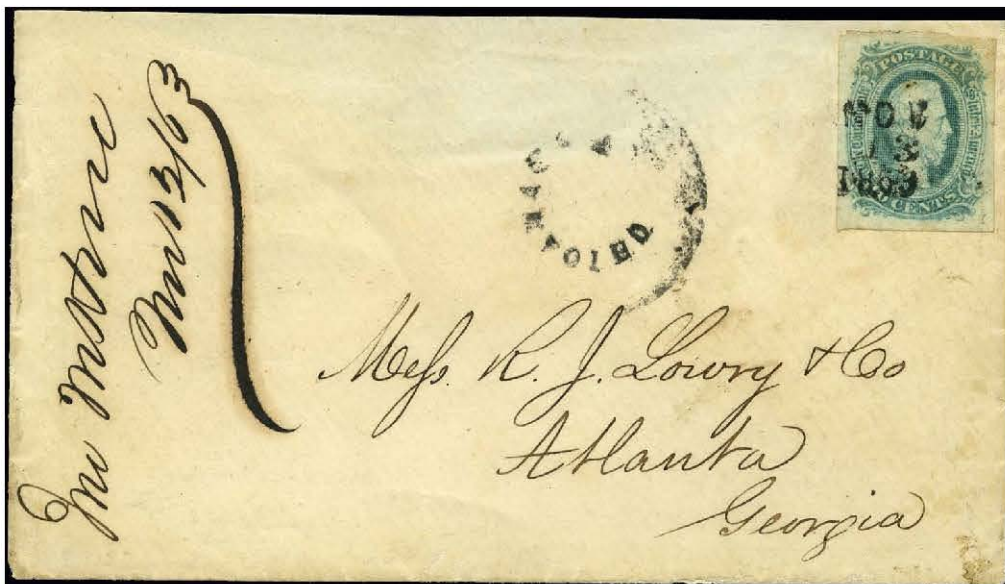

Army of Tennessee

Prior to 1863, the CSA military used civilian post offices exclusively to process mail to and from troops in the field. Beginning in August 1863, the CSA Post Office Department established official post offices for the Army of Northern Virginia and the Army of Tennessee (another for the Army of the Valley is believed to have operated in 1864). Markings applied by official military post offices include grids, targets, “Due” and rate handstamps, so-called “roving” town markings carried from place to place and the “ARMY/OF/TENN” handstamp.

Perforations Applied by CSA Post Office Dept.

In mid-1863 the Archer & Daly 10¢ Engraved issues (both types) were perforated and distributed by the CSA government in Richmond, using a machine imported from London that created 12.5-gauge perforations. Between 500 and 1,000 sheets (50,000 to 100,000 stamps) were perforated and issued—the earliest recorded date of use is 13 July 1863 (the latest is 10 May 1865). Distribution of the officially-perforated stamps was primarily to areas of troop concentrations in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi. Because of the necessity of defending internal railway lines, most uses are affiliated with post offices located on the CSA railway system.

Perforations Applied by local Postmasters

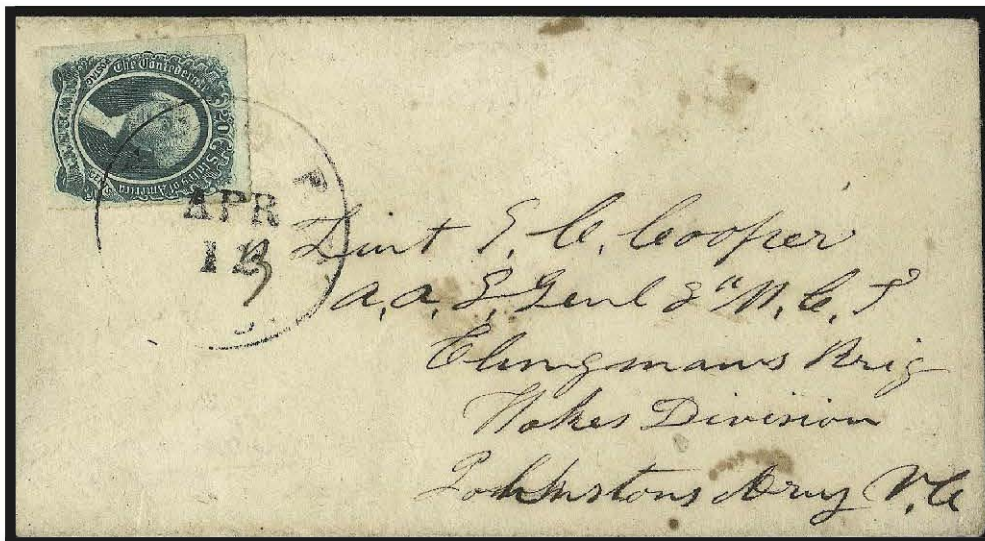

The 5¢ Green Lithograph was rouletted, gauge 20, in Baton Rouge LA and used during the period 24 February to 24 November 1862. Early uses occurred prior to 8 May when the City fell to occupying Union forces and late uses occurred after 21 August when the City was again occupied by Confederate forces. There are no recorded uses during the gap period.

The postmaster in Oxford NC applied roulette perforations to his supply of stamps in 1864 and 1865. All of the recorded covers with the 20¢ roulette are dated 11 and 12 April 1865. Based on the use of the high-denomination stamps at this late date, including covers with box-charge notations, the late W. Wilson Hulme II theorized that the Oxford postmaster, anticipating the end of the war (Lee surrendered on 9 April), decided to use up his supply of stamps, applied stamps to mail for which postage was charged to PO box accounts, and indiscriminately used the 20¢ stamps on 10¢ rate letters because it would not matter when (not if) the CSA government collapsed.

Confederate Express Mail

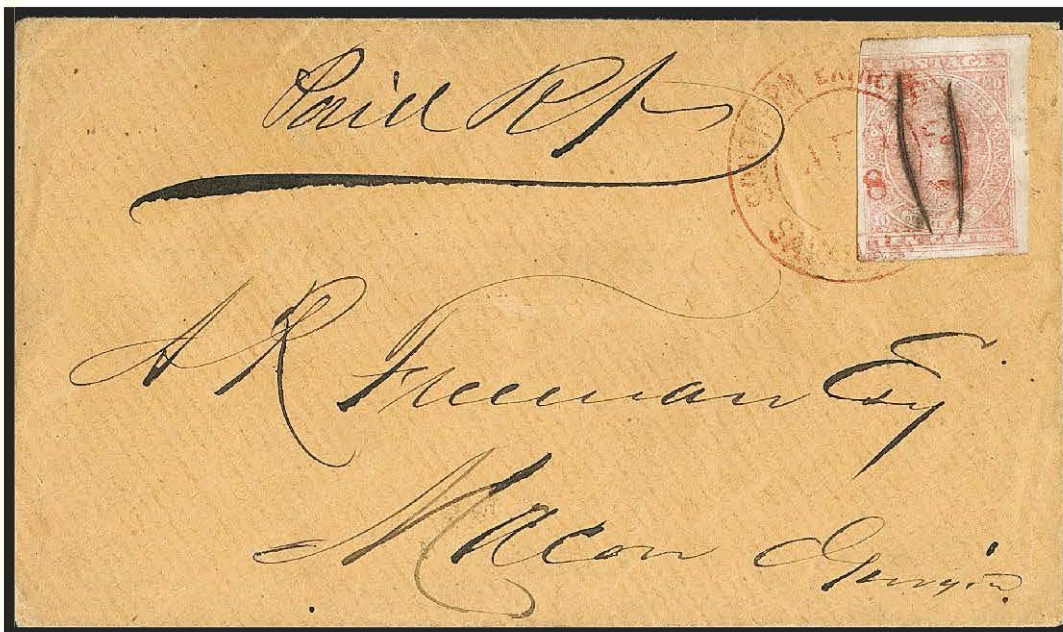

The Confederate Act of 15 March 1861 authorized private express companies to carry mailable matter if applicable CSA postage was paid. Because some express companies failed to pay such postage, an Act of 19 April 1862 revoked the policy and reinstated the provisions of the US Postage Laws and Regulations of 1859, under which letters could be carried only if contained in government postal entires. This effectively prohibited express companies from privately carrying the mails because the Confederate post office did not provide the necessary pre-paid postal stationery. While private carriage was effectively illegal, the practice did not cease completely.

The movement of Southern citizens and military personnel during the war resulted in instances of mail forwarded from one address to another. An additional prepaid postage rate was required on mail marked "forwarded." Postage could be prepaid with adhesive stamps or in cash (or box charge account) and indicated with handstamped "Paid" markings.

This above cover was forwarded the day that the CSA General Issue went on sale at the Charleston post office. The addressee, Wilmot Gibbes DeSaussure, served as the Secretary of the South Carolina Treasury and as a Representative to the State Assembly; he was appointed Brigadier General of State Militia in 1861 and led the 4th Brigade throughout the Civil War; in 1862 he was elected State Adjutant General and Inspector General of Militia.

POSTAGE DUE

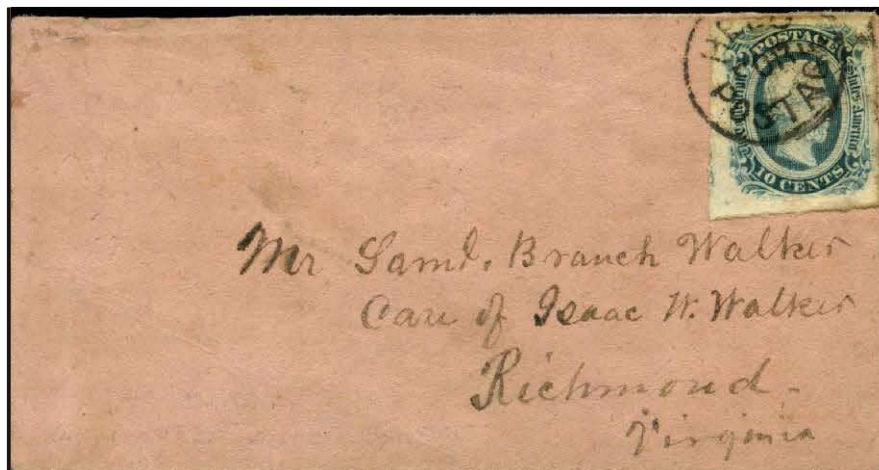

CSA postal laws required prepayment of postage with a few exceptions: soldiers' mail, congressional letters, state officials' letters and dealers in newspapers and periodicals. Although the law required prepayment, in practice postmasters in the South sent some mail marked "due" for all or some of the postage. The covers shown here are not examples of sanctioned postage due usage; they are unusual examples of mail that was held at the post office until postage was paid.

PATRIOTIC FERVOR

During the course of the war, an estimated 15,000 different pro-Union patriotic envelope designs were published in the North. Some were simple flag designs; others were cartoons or multicolored depictions, including uniformed soldiers, camp scenes, famous officers and battle engagements. In contrast, less than 200 Confederate designs are known, with the majority being simple flag designs. The examples of Union and Confederate patriotics shown in this section reflect the contrasting circumstances of the warring parties: the abundance of material in the North and the worsening shortages in the South—factors that influenced the quantity and quality of patriotic stationery.

Confederate Patriotics – Postmaster’s Provisionals

Patriotic envelopes were used in the Confederacy for the duration of the war, but the quantity and quality of products were significantly inferior to the North. Flags were the most popular designs, and they started with the original seven stars, representing each seceded state, and increased to thirteen stars. Designs incorporating pro-Southern verses were also popular, as were those depicting early Confederate heroes, such as President Davis and General Beauregard. However, generals who rose to prominence in the second half of the war — Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson — were not depicted due to paper and ink shortages caused by the Union blockade of Southern ports.

Dissident Use of Propaganda Covers

Propaganda has been a major factor in virtually all wars, and its effective use can be a major influence in victory versus defeat. The war resulted in the outpouring of patriotic sympathy and political expression on both sides, but loyalties were not necessarily aligned with geography. The envelopes below represent use of Union- or CSA-themed propaganda covers by the opposite side that were presumably intended as a challenge to the prevailing sentiment.

*One of two recorded Bell-
Everett campaign covers
with CSA General Issues*

The Confederate use of this envelope was presumably a political statement against secession and in support of Bell, a Tennessee politician who ran for president against Lincoln in 1860 as the candidate for the Constitutional Union Party, which took a neutral stance on slavery and supported preservation of the Union. Bell argued during the campaign that secession was unnecessary because the Constitution protected slavery. His view on secession, which he later reversed after the Battle of Fort Sumter, led Southern newspapers to label him an abolitionist.

WARTIME ADVERSITY

The Civil War caused shortages of basic supplies among the soldiers and civilian population, and the blockade of CSA ports and waterways made shortages of manufactured goods much worse in the South. Stationery and envelopes of good quality were among the staples in short supply, and Southern letter writers had to resort to a wide variety of products and methods to fill the void. Known to collectors as adversity covers, this broad category includes envelopes made from paper used for other purposes (printed forms, wallpaper, etc.) and re-used or modified envelopes.

WARTIME ECONOMY

The South's economy was heavily dependent on slave labor and agricultural products, and it relied on grocers and commission merchants who brokered and stored goods for farmers. For this reason the vast majority of Confederate corner card envelopes are from businesses that provided wholesale and retail grocery products, warehouse facilities and commission-based merchandising. The North continued its import-export business and had a solid manufacturing base, but the Lincoln administration's monetary policies led to bullion hoarding and currency inflation.

The North's Gross Domestic Product

Based purely on industrial capacity and natural resources, the North was destined to win the war against the South and its agrarian, cotton-dependent economy. Estimates of relative Gross Domestic Product for the North and South are difficult to calculate, but some analysts claim that the North had a 4:1 superiority. Below are two examples of wartime cameo corner cards that served to advertise the varied and numerous products and services produced and offered in the North.

Charitable Fundraising and Soldier Relief

Wartime Sanitary Fairs were held by charitable organizations in the North to raise money for the relief of Union soldiers. In addition to fundraising events, the groups ran hospitals and refreshment saloons that provided medical care and warm meals to soldiers returning from the battlefield.

On 13 June 1861, President Lincoln gave the Sanitary Commission semi-official status. Its purpose was to support sick and wounded soldiers. However, funds were not provided to carry on the work, so Sanitary Commission fairs were organized as fundraisers and to enlist volunteers. The Great Central Fair, held in Philadelphia from 7 to 28 June 1864, was the largest and best-organized. The Philadelphia fair was the only one attended by President Lincoln.

WAR IN THE SOUTHWEST

Present day New Mexico and Arizona, both of which were territories that wouldn't become states for approximately 50 years after the War, played an important and often overlooked role in the conflict. Arizona provided a Confederate gateway to California, and control would have denied the Union an important source of gold needed to finance the War as well as the ports needed to blockade several hundred miles of Pacific coastline. These geographies were the scene of several important battles in the Trans-Mississippi theatre following the 16 March 1861 vote by delegates in Arizona, which at the time was part of New Mexico Territory, to secede from the Union and join the Confederacy.

Confederate and Union Soldier's Mail

Confederate soldier's letter, "MESILLA N.M. JAN. 20" (1862) datestamp with "Due 10c" on turned cover to Homer TX from William Jones, Co. K, 1st Regt., Sibley's Brigade, used first with Nacogdoches TX 14 January datestamp (probably 1863) and 5¢ Typograph pair.

Ten examples known of the Mesilla NM (Arizona) CSA occupation marking

In July 1861 Lt. Col. John Baylor raised the CSA flag at Fort Bliss, later occupying Fort Fillmore and the town of Mesilla. On 1 August 1861 following the Confederate victory at the First Battle of Mesilla, he issued a proclamation establishing the CSA Territory of Arizona, naming Mesilla as its capital. In January 1862, the CSA Congress passed a bill establishing the Territory of Arizona, and President Davis issued his proclamation shortly thereafter. During the period in which the CSA Territory of Arizona was formed, Brigadier General Henry Sibley raised three regiments, designated the Army of New Mexico, comprising the 4th, 5th and 7th Texas regiments; the 4th was known unofficially as the 1st Regiment of Sibley's Brigade, to which the sender of this letter, William Jones, belonged.

Union soldier's letter carried by Vedette Mail from Fort Barrett to Fort Yuma and San Diego, then by US mail to San Francisco and New York, 4 May 1862, with manuscript soldier's endorsement "Soldiers Letter, Chas. W. Smith, Capt. Co. B, 2nd Infty. Cal Vols" and "10" due handstamp applied at San Diego.

In April 1862, Brigadier General James H. Carleton ordered the establishment of a regular express to carry soldiers' mail in areas occupied by Union forces. The bravest and most skilled cavalry riders, called Vedettes, and the finest horses were selected to ride relays along the old Butterfield Overland Mail route.

This letter was written on 4 May 1862 from a Union officer with the California Volunteers and mentions prisoners captured at the Battle of Picacho Pass, which was fought about 60 miles from Tucson on 15 April 1862 and resulted in the Union army's temporary retreat westward to the Pima Villages, where they established a supply depot and started construction on Fort Barrett in a remote area along the Gila River.

CONFEDERATE TELEGRAPHY

Beginning in May 1861, the CSA took control of privately-operated telegraph lines in the South. The American Telegraph Company was reconstituted as the Southern Telegraph Company, and the South-Western continued to operate under the same name. All companies were allowed to provide service as private enterprises, but they were subject to government control for military necessity and restricted from transmitting any messages that might aid the enemy or compromise CSA military actions.

Secondary education in the South before and during the Civil War was provided by private schools, usually in connection with a religious institution. Most secondary schools were gender specific, and there was a summer hiatus so that the work requirements of the agriculture-based economy could be met (the traditional summer school break continues today). Communication between families and students attending schools away from home was facilitated by mail, and the use of printed college envelopes by both students and educators was practiced throughout the war.

CSA GOVERNMENT

The CSA abolished the franking privilege that existed in the US prior to the war. Instead, the privilege to send official mail free of charge was authorized for the Post Office Department and later extended to the Agency for the Trans-Mississippi Department. Official mail sent by other departments and agencies required postage, but many of the CSA and state officials prepared imprint envelopes to carry letters—these are known as “semi-official imprints.”

SOUTHERN WATERWAYS

The South's inland waterways provided an important means of transportation for passengers, freight and mail prior to and during the first year of the war. After US forces captured New Orleans in 1862 and Vicksburg in 1863, navigation on the Mississippi River was controlled by US Navy gunboats, but other waterways remained open. The CSA postal laws governing waterway mail followed 1859 US laws. The classification of vessels (contract vs. non-contract), whether letters were prepaid or unpaid, and the destination (port of entry or beyond) determined the rates and markings, but confusion resulted in misapplied markings and rates (in New Orleans, for example).

SOUTHERN RAILROADS

In 1860, there were 22,000 miles of railroad lines in the North and 9,500 miles in the South. In November 1861 the CSA tried to persuade 91 railroads to carry mail at reduced contract rates, but the railroads resisted, and only 15 companies complied. CSA mail was carried on trains in one of three ways: 1) locked through-bags between terminal offices; 2) local or way-mail bags received and delivered along the route; and 3) loose letters given to route agents aboard the trains. Only loose letters handled by route agents received CSA railroad markings. Many lines were destroyed during the war, by both sides. Certain lines were taken over by US forces and operated under military authority, as the post-war Baldwin's Express cover shown below illustrates.

SPECIAL ROUTES

The blanket term Special Routes applies to a variety of means used by correspondents to send mail across the lines of war to reach its destination, including private express companies, government-operated courier/express mail, blockade runners, covert and clandestine routes, and formal flag-of-truce exchanges. Some of the routes were used by correspondents in the North and South, and those are displayed in other sections of this exhibit. The routes used exclusively by Southern correspondents to bypass the US blockade or occupying forces are represented in this section.

Outbound mail was routed across Texas to Mexico where it was forwarded to Tampico, a city and port on the Panuco River about 10 kilometers inland from the Gulf of Mexico, for placement aboard ship. Inbound mail was directed through Tampico to the postmaster in Matamoros, a Mexican town on the southern border of the Rio Grande that became a center for the rebel states commerce and trade due to its proximity to Texas, for forwarding to New Orleans and entry into the CSA postal system. There are no recorded markings for Costa's Express.

Government Trans-Mississippi Mails

The first step in the Union's Mississippi River strategy was the capture of New Orleans on 26 April 1862. US Navy gunboats then ranged up the river, capturing Baton Rouge, Natchez, and arriving off Vicksburg on 18 May 1862. Memphis fell on 6 June, opening up the upper Mississippi to US gunboats. The resulting US naval presence along the Mississippi disrupted CSA Trans-Mississippi postal service.

On 16 April 1863, the CSA authorized PMG Reagan to establish a "Preferred" mail route to facilitate communications and "more speedy transmission of letters and dispatches" across the Mississippi River. The rate for this service was initially set at 50¢. The "Preferred" service was advertised, but no written evidence has been found documenting its formal implementation. However, there are several westbound covers bearing 50¢ in postage with Trans-Mississippi notations.

On 1 May 1863, a "Trans-Mississippi Express Mail" service was established, with the CSA authorizing PMG Reagan to establish post routes and rates to be designated by him. The rate was established at 40¢ per half-ounce and a contractor was hired to carry the express mails twice weekly, starting 20 October 1863. Letters were directed to terminal post office locations on either side of the river, and Post Office Special Agents at those locations determined which courier would carry the mail across the river.

In April 1863, he and other members of Lane's Rangers were exchanged for Federal prisoners and recirculated into the Confederate army. After the war, Heartsill sold groceries and saddles in Marshall, Texas.

Blockade-Run Mail

On 19 April 1861 President Lincoln proclaimed the blockade of the South, encompassing over 3,500 miles of coastline. To stop goods and mail from leaving or entering the CSA, the US naval forces focused on major ports; by mid-1862 the majority were effectively closed. Most surviving blockade-run covers are to or from Europe via the West Indies, sent on vessels through Charleston SC and Wilmington NC and connecting with Nassau, Bermuda and occasionally Halifax, Nova Scotia. Blockade runners also operated on a more limited basis out of Mobile, Savannah, New Orleans and ports in Texas.

Inbound from unknown origin 16 October 1863 to Atlanta GA via Wilmington where 10¢ Die B cancelled 24 October, “SHIP” handstamp and “2” cents captain’s fee due; additional “DUE/10” handstamp possibly for weight over half-ounce.

PRISONER OF WAR MAIL

Letters to and from prisoners of war represent perhaps the most significant human element of the Civil War mails. US and CSA flag of truce exchanges facilitated POW correspondence and the return of released POWs. Exchanges of POW mail were permitted from September 1861 to September 1862 and from July 1863 to June 1865—during the interim, flag of truce mail exchanges were suspended. Old Point Comfort (Fortress Monroe) was the principal exchange point in Virginia on the US side; on the other side in Virginia the CSA first used Norfolk, then Petersburg, and finally Richmond after exchanges resumed in July 1863. During the second period there were six primary exchange points: Richmond–OPC, Pocotaligo–Port Royal, Jackson–Vicksburg, Mobile–New Orleans, Shreveport–New Orleans, and between Galveston and US Blockading Squadron ships.

The Infamous Andersonville Prison

Sent from Union POW held at Camp Sumter in Georgia, better known as Andersonville, censored by Camp Commandant Capt. Henry Wirz (“Exd. H.W. In Extremis”), adversity use of wallpaper envelope to Lewiston ME, single 5¢ De La Rue Typograph underpays the 10¢ CSA rate, cancelled by ‘ANDERSONVILLE GA.’ dateless woodcut circle, carried by flag of truce to Old Point Comfort, entered US mails with 25 August (1864) datestamp and “Due 6” for US postage.

The only wallpaper envelope signed by Andersonville prison commander Henry Wirz—approximately 32 covers from this CSA prison are recorded by Galen Harrison and only some of those are signed by Wirz

Andersonville, officially Camp Sumter, was the largest and most notorious CSA military prison. On 27 March 1864 Captain Henry Wirz assumed command of the stockade. By the end of the war, 12,913 of the approximately 45,000 Union POWs held there had died, mostly from starvation and disease. After the war, Wirz was charged with conspiracy and murder by US authorities. His trial was held in the Capitol building in Washington. A number of former prisoners testified on conditions at Andersonville, many accusing Wirz of specific acts of cruelty (some of these accounts were later called into question by historians as exaggerated or false). The court also heard from CSA officers and considered official correspondence from captured records. Wirz presented evidence that he pleaded to CSA authorities to obtain more food and maintained that he tried to improve the conditions for the prisoners. Wirz was found guilty of murder and sentenced to death. On 10 November 1865 he was hanged at the site of the current Supreme Court building, becoming one of very few Confederate officials to be tried, convicted and executed for war crimes.

Confederate “Immortal 600” Prisoners

In June 1864 US and CSA generals in Charleston SC each placed 50 captured enemy in areas under bombardment; the tit-for-tat engagement ended in the exchange of the POWs. Shortly after the “50” prisoner incident, 600 more Union prisoners were brought to Charleston. In retaliation, approximately 600 CSA prisoners were moved from Fort Delaware on the vessel Crescent City to Morris Island near Charleston, arriving on 7 September. They were held in open barracks as human shields under direct shelling from CSA forces. After the stalemate, the “Immortal 600” CSA prisoners were moved from Morris Island on October 23 and sent to Fort Pulaski, then back to Fort Delaware.

From Lt. W. E. Johnson, a CSA prisoner and one of the “Immortal 600” held by US forces; 21 October 1864 from Morris Island; 6 November 1864 from Fort Pulaski.

US Prison—Camp Hoffman

Unique to the Southbound covers from Union prisons are handstamp censor and examiner markings applied by prison staff and district provost marshals who inspected the mail prior to it entering the postal system, and there were 11 prisons that used such handstamps at various times.

Presented below are covers bearing Type I and Type II censor's markings from Camp Hoffman, which was established at Point Lookout MD shortly after the Battle of Gettysburg and was built to hold 10,000 prisoners. Approximately 50,000 prisoners were confined during its operation and about 3,500 died. Harrison reports 196 known covers.

During October 1863, the mortality rate reached 12.5%, which contrasts with the highest monthly rate at Andersonville, the most infamous of Southern prisons, of only 9%.

CIVILIAN FLAG OF TRUCE MAIL

US and CSA flag of truce exchanges were intended for released prisoners and POW mail, not for civilian correspondence. However, a small amount of civilian mail was exchanged by flag of truce, and covers fall into three periods defined by route: November 1861-April 1862 via Norfolk and Old Point Comfort (Fortress Monroe); May 1862-June 1863 limited mail exchange usually via Old Point Comfort; and June 1863-March 1865 via Richmond and Old Point Comfort.

THE WAR'S END

With Union forces surrounding but not yet occupying the City of Richmond, the CSA postal system discontinued operations on 31 March 1865. On 2 April, Gen. Robert E. Lee and his forces evacuated Petersburg and Richmond, and the next morning the mayor requested that Union forces occupy the capital city to “preserve order and protect women and children and property.” Lee and the Army of Northern Virginia fled towards the village of Appomattox Court House, but were met by Grant and surrendered on 9 April. President Lincoln was shot five days later and died the following day, and Jefferson Davis was captured on 10 May by Union troops and imprisoned at Fortress Monroe.

The Assassination of President Lincoln

Five days after the General Lee's surrender at Appomattox Court House, President Lincoln was shot by John Wilkes Booth, a Confederate sympathizer, while attending a play at Ford's Theater in Washington DC on 14 April 1865. The President died the following day, spawning outpourings of grief throughout the world and commencing a national period of mourning that preceded the period of Reconstruction.

Envelope depicting Lincoln's assassin, John Wilkes Booth, with caption imploring the public to "Hunt the villain down, ... for whom there should be no mercy," used from Lewis DE to Woonsocket RI, with US 3¢ 1861.

Lincoln chose Andrew Johnson, the only sitting senator from a Confederate state who did not resign his seat upon learning of his state's secession, as his running mate in the election of November 1864. Johnson ascended to the presidency upon Lincoln's death, only 42 days after the inauguration on 4 March 1865, and a train carried Lincoln's body on a circuitous path home for burial in Springfield IL. Mary Todd Lincoln and her sons left Washington DC for Chicago, where they resided until leaving for Europe in 1868.

The Capture of Jefferson Davis

Following the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia on 9 April 1865, Jefferson Davis and a cadre of trusted advisors fled Richmond and established a temporary center of government in Danville, VA. With the Union army in close pursuit - largely due to the assertion that Davis was involved in the assassination of President Lincoln and the $100,000 reward promised for his capture - he fled further south and held a final meeting of his cabinet on 4 May before the members dispersed. On 10 May 1865, Davis was captured by Union troops and transported to Fortress Monroe, VA, thus marking the unofficial end of the War and collapse of the Confederacy.

Sent by Jefferson Davis to his wife while a POW at Fortress Monroe and marked “Politeness of Hon J. Speed US Atty Genl.” Speed’s signature served as both a censor’s mark and free frank; letter entering the mails with 25 November 1865 Washington DC datestamp, subsequently marked “Advertised Dec. 5” and “UNCLAIMED,” although eventually received by Ms. Davis and backstamped January 5 at Augusta. Davis was indicted for treason though never tried, and eventually released on bail in May 1867 and pardoned by President Johnson on 25 December 1868.

* * * * *

The capture and imprisonment of Jefferson Davis marked the collapse of the Confederacy. The War was over, and along with 625,000 soldiers and countless civilian deaths from disease and other causes, President Lincoln was arguably the last casualty of the conflict.

As the Nation entered a period of Reconstruction and tremendous political conflict, the mail systems that had functioned independently for four years were merged again under Federal authority.
